Propane prices sold off for a sixth consecutive session on Monday, even as energy futures saw broad-based gains. Brent crude rose by 0.4% and WTI gained 0.5% with fading hopes for a Gaza Ceasefire agreement and with strength in US and European stock market indexes following encouraging European economic data releases. NYMEX natural gas futures gained 2.5% in their third session higher, with a stronger two-week US TDD forecast from the GFS and higher European and Asian gas price markers. Mt. Belvieu TET propane, meanwhile, dropped 2.3% (1.63 cents) lower to average 68.31c/g, and Conway prices saw a similar drop of 2.2% (1.50 cents) to 66.25c/g. The spread between the two benchmarks remains relatively narrow, at 2.06 cents. Prices at Mt. Belvieu have fallen by 11.19 cents since April 26, and Conway prices have lost 8.38 cents over that time.

The sell-off in propane continues this morning. Mt. Belvieu TET prices tumbled 3.4% (2.37 cents) lower to 65.94c/g, with non-TET down at 65.13c/g. Conway prices, similarly, dropped 3.2% (2.13 cents) lower to 64.13c/g. Weakness was largely independent, as losses in crude futures were much smaller, at 0.8% for WTI and Brent both at last look. Natural gas futures were moving in the opposite direction, rising by 1.1% in their fourth session higher. In the news, OPIS reports that UGI Corp. has decided against either a potential sale or a joint venture for AmeriGas Propane, and will instead streamline its operational model and cut costs in order to improve profitability.
